

“Images of war, war of images”

Franck Petiteville, Professor of international relations

Grenoble Institute of political studies

Syllabus

War is an expression of organized violence that civilian populations can rarely escape. The extensive killing of civilians in wars is prohibited by the traditional “just war ethics” and by international humanitarian law. However, this controversial issue remains often theoretical. It becomes less abstract when based on images, photos, and documentaries that are widely disseminated in all contemporary wars. This 10-session course is precisely based on the assumption that visual emotions are necessary to realize the fundamental immorality of violent acts targeting civilians during war. The sessions are based on the collective watching (students and the professor in class) of documentaries about major contemporary wars: Vietnam, Bosnia, Iraq, Afghanistan, Syria, Ukraine, and Gaza. Each case study is first introduced by the professor in order to provide its geopolitical context. Afterwards, the viewing of the documentary is followed by a debate led by the professor over the arguments of just war theory and international humanitarian law.
